Participation is the key to Success

Dear Friends,

This past month has been very difficult because I lost the use of my PC, and almost my ability to create the Hakol copy. If you have difficulty reading any of the articles you may need a magnifying glass. I wanted to include one with the Hakol mailing, that's when I knew I was going over the edge. I have always appreciated my PC and when I get it up and running, I am going to have Rabbi Conn make a special prayer over it - another over the edge reaction.

My frustration although real should be my biggest problem. In short, it reminded me how we take things in life for granted. Having a functionally working computer is almost a given in today's world. We have become so dependent on having these staples in our life that when they are no longer there we are at a loss. When it comes to the things that sustain us, such as jobs, family, friendships or health it is hard to grasp, when things are good, what it would be like without them. Our economy in its present state has turned many people upside down leaving them feeling depressed, hopeless and stranded. It is hard to believe in a Country such as ours that we have these problems, but they exist more than we realize. In our local community, one of the answers to helping our neighbors is Hatzilu. I cannot stress enough the need for your help and donations. Just because your 'computer' is presently up and running, does not, G-d forbid, mean it will not crash. You can find out about specific ways to make a difference by speaking to Shea Lerner, Arlyne Skolnik, Sandy Strenger, Steve Glasser or Joe Eloswsky in Temple or at a Men's Club meeting.

Wishing you and yours a Happy New Year!

With kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,
Morty Gruber -

Nearly a thousand years ago the leader of the Jewish Community in Kudungallur swam across a large body of water with his wife on his back to escape the sacking of their village by invaders. He arrived in Cochin where he was granted asylum by the local king. There, he and others re-established a flourishing Jewish community that for the next 1000 years lived peacefully side by side with its Hindu, and Muslim counterparts until 1948 when the Jews of Cochin began emigrating to the State of Israel. Now there remains fewer than ten synagogues to this day to serve the few remaining Jewish families and visitors. Nanette and I had the privilege of visiting that synagogue and others in Mumbai in December as we travelled with our sons through India. We even had the opportunity to stop at the synagogue where Men's Club donated some of PJC's old Mahzors this past fall.

During our time in India we learned that Jewish interaction with India dates over two thousand years to at least the time of King Solomon, who traded with India. The Jews of India made many contributions to that country establishing libraries and other institutions. In fact many of the Mughal forts of Northern India have the Star of David prominently displayed at their gates. I write this article on the plane, as we return to the US. Celebrating Chanukah in part in India, with Nanette and our sons will be a cherished memory, but I look forward to our being home for its conclusion.

While we were away Men's Club has been busy. The annual Chanukah party took place on December 18th and was a huge success due in large part to the efforts of Steve Taub, Rob Cohen and others who solicited toys from generous merchants and to Al Karo for providing toys and assistance. I would like to thank them and all those who assisted them in making the party a great time for PJC's youth. Please see the list of merchants in this issue of Hakof and support those who support us. If you frequent those stores thank them for their help to PJC. I would like to take this opportunity to specially thank my wife Nanette for her assistance in preparing the "goody bags" given to the children at the conclusion of the party and to Alyse Taub who assisted Steve in his toy purchases. In December auditions for Men's Club show were held. There's still time to join the cast for our March production. Contact Rob Cohen for more details. Mark Hochberg has been busy meeting with Sisterhood and the PJC Express Innovation Committee in planning an exciting conclusion to this year's Men's Club/ Sisterhood Shabbat that will be held on January 28th. It will be a moving family oriented havdalah service followed by a social evening. Please plan to attend and also join for morning services that will be equally moving and memorable. Lastly but not least, thank you for your support of our annual Coat Drive and to Michael and Susan Levy for their work on this worthy project.

In addition to Men's Club/Sisterhood Shabbat in January, Men's Club will be hosting its annual Texas Holdem Tournament on Tuesday, January 10th and the Annual Pancake Breakfast for the Religious School on Sunday, January 8th. Before we know it PJC's first participation in the FJMC's World Wide Wrap will be here on February 5th, watch for details. Finally, for those of you who like to plan well ahead, Men's Club is arranging a special trip in October 2012 to the National Museum of American Jewish History in Philadelphia (www.nmajh.org), more details to follow.

Nanette and I would like to wish you and your families a happy and healthy New Year. 2012 promises to bring many new and exciting programs from Men's Club. Stay tuned.

Happy New Year

Unknown Jewish American Heroes from the 1940's

Al Schwimmer and Israel's Air Force and Aviation Industry
June 17, 2011

"Al Schwimmer died on June 10 in Tel Aviv at age 94, but the obits appeared in the last day or two. Schwimmer, an American who violated US laws to provide aircraft to Israel at its birth, later became the first President of Israel Aircraft Industries (now Israel Aerospace Industries), and is generally considered the father of the Israeli Air Force. Ironically, he died on his 94th birthday.

Born in New York in 1917, Schwimmer worked for Lockheed Martin and TWA, and in the Israeli War of Independence helped smuggle surplus US military and other aircraft through Europe to the new state of Israel. Some credit him with the birth of the Israeli Air Force. He returned to the US after the establishment of Israel, and was tried and convicted of violations of the Neutrality Act, and stripped of his right to vote, though not imprisoned. David Ben Gurion invited him to Israel, where he founded the country's aviation industry. He headed Israel Aircraft Industries until 1978.

In the 1980s, when I was working on Middle Eastern defense production issues, I got to know IAI pretty well, and Schwimmer was legendary, though I never met him.

The Jerusalem Post has a much more detailed obit here. Along with the photo at right of Schwimmer in a cockpit with Ben Gurion.

How Al Schwimmer was persuaded by Israel's first prime minister to found this country's aviation industry.
Al Schwimmer, who died on Saturday at 94 and whose funeral was held on Monday, was branded a "legend" by President Shimon Peres for his vital life's work in Israeli aviation. This extract from the book Start-Up Nation, the best-seller on Israel's economic miracle by Dan Senor and former Jerusalem Post staffer Saul Singer, describes in vivid detail how Schwimmer first got involved:

The fantasy of an Israeli aircraft industry took shape on a bumpy flight over the North Pole in 1951, inside what was to become the first aircraft in Israel's new national airline. The conversation was between a pair of opposites: Shimon Peres, the erudite, future president of Israel, who in 1951 was the chief arms buyer for the new Jewish state, and Al Schwimmer, a swashbuckling American aviation engineer from Los Angeles, whose pals included Howard Hughes and Kirk Kerkorian. Schwimmer's first name was Adolph, but against the backdrop of World War II, he'd opted for Al.

Peres and Schwimmer were on one of their many flights over the Arctic tundra in used planes purchased for Israel's fledgling air force. Flying over the North Pole was dangerous, but they took the risk because the route was shorter " no small consideration when piloting planes that were falling apart.

Al Schwimmer was a raconteur, who'd been captivated by the airline business in its earliest days, when flying machines were an exotic novelty.

He was working for TWA when the United States entered World War II and the entire airline was drafted into the war effort. Though not officially in the US Air Force, Schwimmer and his fellow fliers were given military ranks and uniforms and spent the war ferrying troops, equipment, and the occasional movie star all over the world.

Unknown Jewish American Heroes from the 1940's

During the war, Schwimmer's identity as a Jew meant little to him and had almost no influence on his thinking or way of life. But seeing a liberated concentration camp and the newsreel footage of countless bodies and speaking with Jewish refugees in Europe trying to reach Palestine transformed him.

Almost overnight, Schwimmer became a committed Zionist.

When he heard that the British in Palestine were turning back ships full of European Jewish refugees, Schwimmer came up with what he was convinced was a better way: fly over the British Navy patrols and smuggle the Jews in by landing them at hidden air-fields. He tracked down Ben-Gurion's secret emissary in New York and pitched him the idea. For months, the representative of the Haganah, the main underground Jewish army in Palestine, sat on the idea. But when it became clear that the British would soon withdraw and a fullscale Arab-Jewish war over Israel's independence would ensue, the Haganah contacted Schwimmer.

By this time, they had an even more urgent need than smuggling refugees: building an air force. The Haganah did not have a single aircraft and would be completely exposed to the Egyptian air force. Could Schwimmer buy and repair fighter planes and smuggle them into Israel? Schwimmer told Ben-Gurion's agents that he'd start immediately, even though he knew he would be violating the 1935 Neutrality Act, which prohibited US citizens from exporting weaponry without government authorization.

This was just chutzpah. This was criminal.

Within days, Schwimmer had tracked down a handful of Jewish pilots and mechanics from the United States and the United Kingdom, for what he told them would be the first civilian Jewish air-line. He was obsessed with secrecy, and did not even want to bring them into the fold about the idea of building fighter planes. Few were even informed that the planes were destined for Israel.

When outsiders inquired, the cover story was that they were building a national airline for Panama and would ferry cattle to Europe.

Though the FBI impounded the largest aircraft he bought - three Constellations - Schwimmer and his gang succeeded in smuggling out other aircraft, some by literally flying over the heads of the FBI agents who'd demanded that the planes be grounded. At the last minute, the Haganah cut a separate deal to buy German Messerschmitts from Czechoslovakia, which Schwimmer was also drafted to fly to Israel.

WHEN THE 1948 War of Independence came, Schwimmer's aircraft fought off Egyptian planes that were bombing Tel Aviv. In certain battles, the barely trained Israeli pilots were instrumental in ensuring that the Negev desert - a relatively large triangular swath of land starting a few miles south of Jerusalem and Tel Aviv, between the Egyptian Sinai and Jordan - became part of Israel.

After Israel prevailed in the War of Independence, Schwimmer returned to the United States, despite being a wanted man. The FBI had figured out the smuggling scheme, and the US Justice Department had built a criminal case against him. His trial, along with those of a number of the pilots he had recruited, was a public sensation. The defendants pleaded not guilty, on the grounds that the law itself was unjust.

Schwimmer got off with paying a fine, which was widely seen as exoneration.

Once Schwimmer was cleared, it didn't take him long to get back into the smuggling game. By 1950, Schwimmer had joined forces with Shimon Peres, then a young Ben-Gurion protégé working for the new Israeli Defense Ministry. Peres had tried to buy thirty surplus Mustang aircraft for the Israeli Air Force, but the United States had decided to destroy the planes instead. Their wings were sliced off and their fuselages cut in two.

So Schwimmer's team bought the cutup planes at cost from a Texas junk dealer, reconstructed them, and made sure they had all their parts and were operational.

Then the team disassembled the planes again, packed them in crates marked "Irrigation Equipment," and shipped them to Israel.

But because of the urgency with which they had to get the aircraft to Israel, a few of the planes were left assembled, and Schwimmer and Peres flew these to Tel Aviv. And that is how they found themselves in 1951 talking about a future Israeli aviation industry.

Peres became captivated by Schwimmer's ideas for creating an aircraft industry in Israel that would serve a purpose beyond a short-term military strategy. It was part of Peres's fascination with creating industries in Israel.

Unknown Jewish American Heroes from the 1940's

Schwimmer insisted that in a world flooded with surplus aircraft from the war, there was no reason why Israel could not buy planes cheaply, repair and improve them, and sell them to militaries and airlines in many countries, while building Israel's own commercial industry. Shortly after they returned to the United States, Peres took Schwimmer to meet Ben-Gurion, who was on his first visit to America as Israel's prime minister.

"You learning Hebrew now?" was Ben-Gurion's first question when Schwimmer reached out his hand to greet him; they had met repeatedly during the War of Independence.

Schwimmer laughed and changed the subject: "Nice girls here in California, don't ya think, Mr. Prime Minister?" Ben-Gurion wanted to know what Schwimmer was working on.

Schwimmer told him about the renovations he was carrying out.

"What? With this tiny collection of machines you can renovate planes?" Schwimmer nodded.

"We need something like this in Israel. Even more. We need a real aviation industry. We need to be independent," Ben-Gurion said. This was exactly what Schwimmer had discussed with Peres, while flying over the tundra. "So, what do you think?" Unbeknownst to Schwimmer, Ben-Gurion had recently instructed the Technion to build an aeronautical engineering department. In giving the order, he'd said, "a high standard of living; a rich culture; spiritual, political and economic independence..."

are not possible without aerial control.

"Sure, I think you're right," said Schwimmer, falling into the prime minister's trap.

"I'm glad you think so. We'll expect you to come back to Israel to build one for us."

Schwimmer stared dumbfounded at Peres.

"Just do it, Al," said Peres. Schwimmer resisted. He immediately began thinking of the run-ins he would have with the Israel Air Force chiefs and the small, but powerful Israeli establishment. Plus he didn't speak Hebrew. He wasn't a party insider. He hated politics and bureaucracy. And the Israeli combination of socialist, economic planning and cronyist politics could be stifling for anyone, let alone someone trying to build an aviation industry.

He told Ben-Gurion that he could build the company only if it would be free from cronyism and no political hacks getting jobs. A private company, organized along commercial lines, he told Ben-Gurion.

"You're just right for Israel. Come," Ben-Gurion responded.

Schwimmer did go to Israel. Within five years, Bedek, the airplane maintenance company he founded with two Israelis, became the largest private employer in the country.

By 1960 Bedek was producing a modified version of the French Fouga fighter plane. At an official unveiling and test flight of the plane, dubbed Tzukit ("swallow" in Hebrew), Ben-Gurion told Schwimmer, "This place isn't just Bedek anymore. You've gone beyond repairs. You guys have built a jet. The new name should be Israel Aircraft Industries." Ben-Gurion, who by now was deputy defense minister, translated the new company name.

Peres and Ben-Gurion had managed to recruit an American Jew to provide one of the biggest long-term jolts to Israel's economy, all without asking anyone for one investment dollar.

Here's How It Works:

Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!

2ND ANNUAL COAT DRIVE A SUCCESS

Thanks to the generosity of our Plainview Jewish Center family, the Men's Club was able to donate almost 70 coats to needy Jewish families right here on Long Island. In an interesting twist, the organization that took the coats last year cancelled the program due to a lack of funds. So we had racks of coats and nowhere to send them. The hero of this story was Rabbi Conn, who put me in touch with someone at the Sid Jacobson JCC. They, with an organization called the Tikkun Alliance of the North Shore (TANS), are going to distribute the coats and food in Glen Cove on Sunday January 8. If you would like to volunteer to help, please contact Bridgett at badair@sjcc.org, or call 516-484-1545 ext 116.

So first I want to thank all of you who donated the coats, thanks to Rabbi Conn for his guidance, and thanks to my wife, Sue, who came up with the idea in the first place.

There is one rumor I would like to put to rest. I have NEVER worn any of the coats that were donated. However, I did keep the $1.37 I found in the pockets!!

A Simple Shroud

Death is the great equalizer, and once people have passed away it is irrelevant how wealthy, popular or influential they were or were not. Jewish burial customs are particularly sensitive to this issue, as testified to by the burial custom of the modest shroud.

A Jewish burial shroud is known as tachrichim, a plural word since the shroud is actually made of several garments. Tachrichim means to bind or wrap, since the body of the deceased is wrapped in these shrouds. The universal use of tachrichim stems from the era of the sages.

In ancient times, the expense involved in burying the dead was often harder (financially) on the relatives than the death itself, so they would abandon the body and run away--"until Rabban Gamliel came and adopted a [simple style] burial. Per his instructions, when he died he was carried out in simple garments of linen, and [then] all the people followed his example and carried [the dead] in garments of linen. Said Rabbi Papa: And now it is the general practice [to carry out the dead] even in coarse cloth worth [only one] zuz" (Ketubot 8b).

Since that time, it has been the accepted custom throughout the world for Jews to be buried in a simple, white linen or muslin shroud. There are no buttons, zippers or fasteners and no pockets, since nothing goes with the deceased into the next world. The shroud consists of a shirt (kutonet), pants (mich'na'sa'yim), belt (avnet) and head covering (mitz'nephet). For some, a long jacket (kittel, such as the one worn at the Passover seder or on Yom Kippur) and/or prayer shawl (tallit) are included as well. These garments reflect the dress clothing of the High Priest, and are symbolic of the honor that is paid to the deceased.

Marcel Marceau was a Holocaust Hero

He was born Marcel Mangel on March 22, 1923, in Strasbourg, Alsace. His father Charles,

Was a kosher butcher who loved the arts. Marcel's mother Anne nee Werzberger, took him to a Chaplin movie when her was five. He was entranced.

At the beginning of WWII, he and his brother, Alain, hid their Jewish origins, and changed their name from Mangel to Marceau. His father died in Auschwitz. His mother survived the war.

The French Resistance was headed up by many Jews. Marcel and Alain joined the Resistance in Limoges. The Jewish children had to be protected from both the French police and the Germans.

Although he was trilingual, Marcel taught hundreds of Jewish children the art of communicating in mime because it was important for the children to converse silently.

The children were brought to safety by Marceau in Switzerland.

In 1944, he joined the Free French Forces under General Charles de Gaulle, acting as liaison officer to General Patton's army. Marceau entertained thousands of US troops after the liberation of Paris.

Marceau was "discovered" by Laurel and Hardy. He spoke only once in a performance..

In Mel Brooks' film "Silent Movie," Marceau said the word, "Non." His career lasted over 60 years as an actor, director, teacher, interpreter, and public multilingual speaker on five continents.

He died on Yom Kippur in 2007.
